Bio

Dr. Adrian N. Carter, with a Doctor of Philosophy in Conflict Resolution Studies, is the CEO of the Carter Development Group, an equity and inclusion, conflict resolution, leadership development, and executive coaching firm. Dr. Carter is also the founder of the Center for Advanced Leadership and Conflict Resolution, a non-profit organization focused on male empowerment initiatives. With over 20 years of experience, Dr. Carter is an internationally recognized professional development educator, conflict resolution practitioner, trained mediator, facilitator, executive conflict coach, author, and life coach. He also provides keynote addresses and facilitates interpersonal and organizational leadership that resolves conflict by bridging the gap between persons and organizations using The Ellison Model.

Dr. Carter has impacted thousands of people using The Ellison Model, a diversity, equity, and inclusion tool for social development developed by world-class sociologist, professor, and mentor Dr. Deryl G. Hunt. The Ellison Model provides tools for strategic planning, change management, conflict resolution, and leadership development that internally and externally build inclusive communities through character, community, and economic development. The Ellison Model is a research-based model with proven effectiveness for corporate, government, non-profits, and educational institutions. Dr. Carter continues to build on his mentor's mantra, "It's not the problem that counts – It's the solution."

Dr. Carter's work in leadership development, conflict resolution, and equity is robust. With a strong background in K-12 and higher education, Dr. Carter has served in numerous equity roles and has organized numerous events for cultural education and engagement.

Dr. Carter founded the Center for Advanced Leadership and Conflict Resolution, a 501(c)(3) non-profit for educating men and boys on conflict resolution and equity. The signature event of the non-profit is the EmpowerMEN Conference, a male empowerment initiative focused on conflict resolution, leadership development, and redefining the identity of men in the 21st century. Dr. Carter places immense focus on the identity, emotion, and power of men, specifically examining race relations, gender roles, the education system, and how they create interpersonal and organizational conflict amongst men, women, and society. As a father of three, Dr. Carter is passionate about developing boys and girls into caring, sharing, and loving people through his organization.

Moreover, Dr. Carter is a thought leader committed to influencing people through his training and publications to become more caring, sharing, and loving individuals who understand the importance of inclusive community building. Dr. Carter is the author of the must-have leadership development book, Emerging as the Right Person in the Right Place at the Right Time: Leadership in the 21st Century Using the Ellison Model.

Dr. Carter is also the author of a powerful book on love, marriage, and relationships titled Let's Get Married & Do Everything Except Make It Last: A Heart-to-Heart with Men on Loving and Leading. The book challenges social norms and gender roles to better romantic and interpersonal relationships.

His most recent book is Black Fragility: Addressing the Unaccountability of Black Men & Women in the 21st Century to Heal, Encourage, Love, & Protect Blackness, a powerful book on the state of Black men and women and the importance of taking radical accountability and overcoming "Black fragility." His motto is #buildsolutions.
